FOR FARMS, RECORD HEAT IS DEVASTATING

Reuters

WASHINGTON July was the hottest month in the continental U.S. on record, beating the hottest month in the devastating Dust Bowl summer of 1936, the U.S. government reported Wednesday.

It was also the warmest January-to-July period since modern record-keeping began in 1895, and the warmest 12-month period, eclipsing the last record set just a month ago, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration said.

This is the fourth time in as many months that U.S. temperatures broke the hottest-12-months record.

The average temperature for July across the contiguous 48 states was 77.6 degrees, or 3.3 degrees above the 20th century average.

The previous warmest July, in 1936, averaged 77.4 degrees.

Here's a look at some of the numbers.

An ear of corn rots Tuesday in a drought-stricken farm field in Bondurant, lowa. GETTY IMAGES

63 PERCENT

Percentage of the 48 contiguous states affected by drought this summer.

75 PERCENT

Portion of corn and soybeans grown in the Midwest, which saw near-record droughts.

12 PERCENT

The government will make its first estimate of the fall harvest Friday. It already has cut projections for corn yields by 12 percent due to hot, dry weather in the Farm Belt.

1956

Analysts say this is the worst drought since 1956.

1936

What made this year different from the year of the Dust Bowl summer? Nighttime temperatures—it never really cooled off.

50% and 30%

The drought triggered a surge in the prices for U.S. corn and soybeans to record highs last month, with values rising about 50 percent and 30 percent, respectively, over the past two months.

2008

Global concern exists over potential increases in food prices after a similar surge led to food riots in dozens of countries in 2008.

Remember the good ol' sick days?

• @mattlindner

Adulthood has ruined many of the things that brought me great joy as a child.

Birthdays are now reminders I'm getting old. The Easter Bunny and Santa Claus are now creepy guys in costumes. And that's not the worst of it.

The one joy adulthood completely and totally obliterates is the sick day. For adults, sick days are worse than paying your student loans, missing your bus and making last weekend's regrettable walk of shame all rolled into one.

This epiphany hit me recently as I recovered from a nasty infection that kept me out of the office for six days. I had what amounted to a golden ticket from Willy Wonka in the form of a note from my doctor telling my bosses that I wasn't fit to work for a full week.

As a kid. this note would have been enough for me to jump for joy on the inside (while of course maintaining a facade of illness on the outside). Yet as I lay alone in my apartment, my leg elevated and wrapped in a heating pad, all I could do was make a mental checklist of the things I'd need to catch up on once I got back.

Growing up, sick days were on par with pizza parties and field trips to the zoo in terms of things you looked forward to. A sick day meant the three C's-cartoons, cookies and the occasional cuddle from Mom to help make you feel better. You didn't have to worry about food or taking care of yourself because someone else was there to do it for you. Missing a day or two of schoolwork wasn't a big deal.

No such luck as an adult.

Forget all the TLC you got when you were a kid. As an adult, you're on your own to make sure you're medicated, fed and at your doctor's appointment-even when the CTA is running 20 minutes behind and you feel There's also the inherent dread of the doctor's bill and the creative accounting you do in your head to determine if you can afford your rent and your prescription that particular month. The only personal contact you have with another human being is when the delivery guy arrives with dinner because you're not gonna cook when you're sick.

Then there's the issue of your job, because in the real world, missing work means consequences. No matter how many times your boss tells you to rest up and feel better, you still feel the need to keep up with the rat race. There are voicemails to check and emails to respond to. You feel like garbage, but you do it because you're going to be even further behind when you return if you don't. It's a far cry from the sick days we enjoyed as kids. Gone are the cartoons (unless you count "Maury"), the cookies and the bowls of chicken soup delivered by Mom. Instead, it's just a vast abyss of sickness, stress and anxiety.

It's enough to make you stock up on citrus, multivitamins and Benadryl while draping your extremities in bubble wrap to ensure your body stays healthy and your sanity remains intact. Doctor's orders, of course.

BABY ON BOARD

New Cutler born just in time for preseason start

By Georgia Garvey | REDEYE

Call it "the instant birth announcement."

In a relationship that's at times gone public on Twitter, maybe it was fitting that the social networking site was where Kristin Cavallari first filled the world in on the birth of her baby with Bears quarterback Jay Cutler.

"We are thrilled to welcome Camden

Jack Cutler into the world," Cavallari, 25, tweeted from her @KristinCav account about 10 a.m. Wednesday. "He was born this morning weighing 7 lbs 9 oz. Everyone is great!"

Cutler, 29, and Cavallari, former star of "The Hills," "Laguna Beach" and "Dancing With the Stars," have been dating for about two years. Reps for Cavallari confirmed that she had given birth but had no other statement.

The Bears had no comment on whether Cutler will be taking time off after the birth and said the team does "not comment on our players' personal lives," so there was no word whether the QB would miss the team's first preseason game against the Broncos in Chicago on Thursday.

Bears tackle J'Marcus Webb took to Twitter, though, to offer his best wishes after the birth announcement, tweeting: "Happy Birthday to Jay Cutler's baby and ME!!!!!! Now I am obligated to protect the baby too!!! Let's go!! Go Bears!!!"

It's not clear if the youngest Cutler was born in Chicago, but Life&Style senior news reporter Jordi Lippe said Cavallari had been in the city up until just before the birth. Lippe said Cavallari wanted to go to Lollapalooza last weekend, but she was due to go into labor at any moment and had to miss the music fest.

"She said she was trying to stay inside as much as possible just because Chicago was so hot," Lippe said. "She really wanted to go" to Lollapalooza.

Cutler and Cavallari often are spotted out together, in restaurants across the city and at events like Cubs-Sox games. But things haven't always been smooth sailing for the couple. An earlier engagement was broken just days after Cavallari appeared in a wedding dress in Life&Style. By December, though, things were back on track. "This time its official," Cavallari tweeted. "Jay and I are engaged again:)"

Cutler hasn't been particularly chatty about the pregnancy or his plans with Cavallari, but he told the Tribune in July that he was "doing a lot of listening, which is

JUST ASKIN'

A quick search of the oi' Internet turns up two baby registries under the names Kristin Cavallari and Jay Cutler: One at toysrus.com's Babies R Us site and one at bel-bambini.com of California. Were we able to independently confirm these are the ACTUAL registries of Chicago's newest power parents? No. Will that stop us from ogling said registries? Of course not. Here's a quick look at what's out there. JIM WALSH, REDEYE

BUSY BEARS

Now that they're parents, will Kristin Cavallari and Jay Cutler get out as much? Only time will tell. Until then, here's a look at some of the places our "About Last Night" columnist, Luis Gomez, has spotted the Chicago power couple since they started dating. REDEYE also something I'm learning more and more about." And it was Bears teammate Earl Bennett who let the cat out of the bag on WSCR-AM 670 that the couple were expecting a boy. The two hadn't announced the due date of their child in advance, either.

Cavallari has been more open to discussing their news, though, tweeting a lot about pregnancy cravings and symptoms. Cutler doesn't have a Twitter account anymore, but he made occasional appearances in her feed. She recently tweeted that he was cooking lasagna for her, adding that "he takes such good care of me. Good thing because I can barely move."

Cavallari also has let the media know she and Cutler were a bit taken aback when they found out she was pregnant. She reportedly told Glamaholic magazine that they "left it up to fate" as to whether they would get pregnant.

"I knew there was a possibility, but I was really excited," she reportedly said. "Even if you are trying, just to see a positive result is shocking!"

The baby might have been a little unplanned, but Lippe said Cavallari has hinted she might want to have more kids before she heads down the aisle.

"Kristin said ... she would want to hold off on the wedding for right now," Lippe said. "They want four kids total."

In December, Cutler said there was no date set for an eventual wedding, joking that he'd "just heard about" the plans. For updates on the Chicago couple, Twitter might be your best bet.

Red Line gets bigger rehab

Chicago Tribune

With service disruptions already delaying commuters this summer on the CTA Red Line north branch due to emergency face-lifts on seven of the rail system's most dilapidated stations, transit officials Wednesday expanded the project by adding $15 million in track and viaduct repairs to reduce slow zones.

The decision to piggyback on track closures and train reroutes taking place during the ongoing $57.4 million rehab of the stations-rather than creating new interruptions later-means Red Line trains will run faster sooner on the North Side, CTA President Forrest Claypool said.

"We hope to eliminate slow zones and shave two to three minutes off the commute in 2012 instead of having to wait [to do the work] until 2014," Claypool said.

The seven stations undergoing temporary repairs until funding is available to demolish

About 1.3 miles of deteriorated track and rail will be replaced at the Lawrence, Granville and Jarvis stations, as well as portions of track between the Berwyn, Thorndale and Granville and Loyola stops, officials said. Waterproofing and track replacement also will occur between Loyola and Morse.

In addition, viaducts over Pratt and Lawrence avenues will be repaired, officials said.

FBI: Wisconsin temple gunman killed himself

MILWAUKEE, Wis. The white supremacist gunman who killed six people at a Sikh temple in Wisconsin died of a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head, the FBI said Wednesday.

A police officer shot and wounded the gunman, Wade Page, 40, in the stomach outside the temple in Oak Creek on Sunday, said Teresa Carlson, an FBI special agent in "Subsequent to that wound, it appears that Page died from a self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head," she told a news conference.

Police had said Page had been shot to death by an officer responding to the attack at the Sikh Temple of Wisconsin in suburban Milwaukee.

Carlson said she had seen a video of the police officer wounding Page with a squad rifle. "It's an amazing shot, and thank goodness," she said.

Federal authorities have said they are treating the attack as a possible act of domestic terrorism. Page, an Army veteran, was a musician who played in white power punk-metal bands. He was armed with a 9mm handgun during the attack.

President Obama called Indian Prime Minister Manmohan Singh to express his condolences over the temple

Carlson said investigators had not found any motive for the attack, which also wounded four people, including a police officer shot eight or nine times after responding to a 911 call.

WHAT'S BU77ING AT THE GAMES TODAY

This is ... the Olympic Games!

Despite some critics going all Simon Cowell on NBC Olympics host Ryan Seacrest, a recent poll suggests viewers think he deserves a medal. In a poll conducted by The Hollywood Reporter, 78 percent of viewers are satisfied with Seacrest's performance. The "American Idol" host can't brag too much, however. Dan Patrick is receiving support from 94 percent of viewers, and 92 percent approve of Bob Costas.

So, that makes it OK?

Cameron van der Burgh's world record in the 100-meter breaststroke is tainted-because he said so. The South African gold medalist told the Sydney Morning Herald he used extra dolphin kicks, which are illegal. "If you're not doing it, you're falling behind," he told the newspaper. "It's not obviously-shall we say-the moral thing to do, but I'm not willing to sacrifice my personal performance and four years of hard work for someone that is willing to do it and get away with it."

Experts surprised to discover fat burning effect in Raspberry Ketones (Canoga Park, CA) In recent scientific studies, researchers have found that raspberry ketones affect the metabolism by increasing the release of two hormones, norepinephrine and adiponectin. Norepinephrine causes the body's temperature to rise which burns more fat. Adiponectin has direct control over your metabolism. When there are high levels of adiponectin, the cells are consistently releasing rather than storing fat. Simply put, thinner people have larger amounts while obese people have significantly lower levels.

Research and Development

Unfortunately, it takes an extremely large amount of raspberries to produce the required amount of ketones necessary to promote weight loss so the chemists at SimplePure Nutrition went to work. Using only natural, high quality ingredients, they developed a proprietary formula specifically designed to create the

The Bears' left tackle was overrun in last year's preseason opener, saying afterward he wasn't treating it like a regular-season game. He can't afford to make that mistake again—or Jay Cutler will have his head.

The former first-round draft pick will be at right tackle and playing for the first time since he injured his knee during Week 2 last year. Will he start to show he was worth the investment?

Alshon Jeffery

The Bears know Marshall can catch the ball, run solid routes and block. If Jeffery has a sharp learning curve, Green Bay might be just a little more nervous. We hope.

Shea McClellin

We'll notice Brian Urlacher's absence a little less if someone else on the team makes a star-level impact. McClellin, the team's firstround draft pick this season, is as good a candidate as any.

The Chicago Rush are having a really good week, PR-wise. BREAKUP ROMCOM

Rashida Jones revisits her unpretty 'stoner drunk mess' past as star of 'Celeste and Jesse Forever'

FAST PAISED

Matt
Pais

» mpais
@tribune.com
» @mattpais

Women break down in romantic comedies all the time. They just rarely do so to the point of looking unattractive, Rashida Jones says.

"She always looks good, her hair looks good and her apartment's pretty. It's like, there's things strewn on her couch and she's sniffling a little bit," says the 36-year-old star and co-writer of the breakup tale "Celeste and Jesse Forever." "We wanted to go way past that. The un-showered, un-tethered, stoner drunk mess that I have been at times in my life, and I think other women have been."

In the film opening Friday, Celeste (Jones) has exactly that sort of breakdown as she copes with her divorce from Jesse (Andy Samberg), who moves on to another woman faster than Celeste expected. The movie offers a welcome opportunity to spend more time with the immensely likable "Parks and Recreation" actress, who so far has made most of her big-screen appearances in supporting parts in films like "I Love You, Man," "Our Idiot Brother" and "The Social Network."

At the Peninsula Hotel, Jones (daughter of Quincy, a Chicago native) talked music, what couples should discuss more frequently and her incredibly eventful life that has included having LL Cool J perform at her Sweet 16 and receiving Cabbage Patch Kids as a gift when she went to the mall. With Michael Jackson.

"I think that was probably the first time I was like, 'Oh, yeah, my life is not like other people's lives,'" she says with a laugh. "I'm at the mall with Michael Jackson."

If you could hear one song for the rest of your life, "Call Me Maybe" or "What Makes You Beautiful," which would you choose? "What Makes You Beautiful"?

That One Direction song.

[Gasps.] [Sings and snaps.] "That's what makes you beautiful!" Oh my God, that's so funny. I was just in Italy with a friend of mine and we sang that the entire time. I love One Direction! Oh, but probably "Call Me Maybe" is a better song as a construction, as a masterpiece. It's more interesting. But then I wouldn't get to see those cute boys. Oh, no, I'm not watching the video, I'm just listening to the song? "Call Me Maybe."

That was a good back and forth. [Laughs.] With myself.

In "Celeste and Jesse Forever," there's a sense that the characters' relationship went on too long, or some things went unexamined. What's something couples don't discuss as much as they should?

I guess probably in the modern age, probably monogamy. Because I feel like it's this thing that we just assume we're going to do and that's what you commit to when you commit to a relationship, but there are parts of it that are unnatural and tested every day because there's so much choice now. And you don't get married to your high school sweetheart; you don't stay in your hometown. You have access to the entire world. So I feel like it would be good for couples to discuss the fact that the monogamy they give to each other is a gift and it's something to be respected and to feel grateful for as opposed to just taking it for granted.

There are some awkward dates in this movie.

[Laughs.] Many fails.

I believe you say, "Do you like bread?" at one point.

Yeah, perfect conversation starter.

Great conversation starter. What's the worst thing someone's said to you on a date or something you said that as soon as it was out of your mouth you were like, "Whoops"?

[Laughs.] So many bad moments. But I remember going on a date with a guy and we did not know each other at all, and he tried to feed me lobster. And that was really awkward.

Pieces of lobster or a whole-

On a fork. And I was like, "Oh ..." [demonstrates trying to lean in and eat it], "... thanks." It was just awkward. I think he had an '80s image of a romantic date in his head, and it was really awkward.

Was there a different dish that would have been more appropriate than lobster?

No, don't try to feed me. I'm not your child. I'm not your pet.

I'm having this "American Psycho" vision. [Laughs.] It wasn't that bad.

It's interesting to think about the portrayal of men and women on screen, and usually it's the guys who need to shape up and lack ambition. Do you feel like that's usually the case, and if so, is that because that's how it is in real life?

I think we see that now in modern movies. I feel like Judd Apatow really broke that open. That's the kind of guy that exists now, this Peter Pan-syndrome, man-child, video game-playing, hoodie-wearing guy who refuses to grow up. I think, not to be too psychoanalytical about it, but I think it's a result of having a really powerful feminist movement. We had a movement that moved us forward that said, "You don't have to just be a mom. You don't have to just be a wife. You can be a CEO. Even though you're still not going to get paid as much, you can go do other things." And it empowered us. Guys haven't had anything to be empowered by since the Industrial Revolution. They don't have anything saying, "Go feel your feelings, go take care of your kid, it's all good. Write poetry or be sensitive." We didn't give guys the same opportunity to develop that side of themselves, so I think in response, in rebellion, they have firmly planted their feet in childhood.

What would be a push in that direction for guys?

I think women actually need to help them evolve a little bit. I think they need to stop coddling them. It's like Celeste says to Jesse in the movie, "Go get a job, go get a job." Maybe just support him more and let him go be a man somehow or let him go. Be like, "I'm not paying for anything else unless we pay for it together."

You've had so many incredibly unique things happen in your life. Correct me if I'm wrong about any of this: LL Cool J performed at your Sweet 16; you sang backup on a Maroon 5 album; you would have been Tupac's sister-in-law. Do you have a sense of having a different, interesting life or is it more that this has always been normal to you and don't think anything of it?

I mean, in some regard yeah, I don't know anything different but I've always had this pull toward normalcy because I've felt a little weird and different, and there's some times where I stop and I'm like, "My life is really cool." It's great, and sometimes it would be so cool to one day just be from a small town and be kind of normal. I struggle with it a little bit. Now as I get older I accept that this is just the way my life is and will always be like that and I search for normalcy and consistency as much as I can. I'm aware that it's different from other people's lives. I definitely am aware of that.

Can you think of a time when you were a kid that felt like the first time you looked around and said—

"I'm not like everybody else?" I was just saying we used to go to the mall with Michael Jackson when we were kids. He'd be like, "Let's go buy toys" to us and his nieces and nephews and stuff. I was always a little bit uncomfortable with how famous he was and it was like embarrassing, so I would walk a little bit ahead of him because I didn't want anybody to think that maybe I knew somebody that famous.

Why wouldn't you want them to?

It's embarrassing because everybody's looking. Everybody's looking at you and everybody's looking at him and indirectly at us. I just felt a little bit like, "Don't look at me."

What's something you haven't gotten to do on the big screen yet that you still want to do?

I think I need to play maybe like a killer or a drug addict. [Laughs.] Or I have to play somebody who's a marginal, sociopathic member of society.

Why?

Because I haven't done it and I wonder if I could do it. Or a misanthrope. Just somebody who's a little bit left of center.

"Freaks and Geeks" was probably the last time you were a huge badass, right?

Yes! And by the way I remember very clearly the director being like, "I need you to be more mean." "But I just, I'm being so mean." She's like, "More mean." She just kept pushing me and pushing me and it felt really uncomfortable, so I wonder if I could. I might blow it, but I'd love the chance.

If you could have a dinner party with any three people in the world, who would you want there?

Alive?

Or not. That you've never met before.

That's so tough. Bill Gates. Oh man that's so tough. That I've never met before? [Groans.] Really?

Or whoever you want. I hate to stress you out.

I'm so stressed out about it. I'm going to go with Albert Einstein, Bill Gates and maybe Dorothy Parker. That sounds like a good dinner party, right?

And if I let you have five more, the One Direction guys can come.

Oh, yes! That's a great idea! [Laughs.]

At the time he kind of destroyed me. It took a while before we actually became friends." -Rashida Jones, on her brief relationship with "Celeste and Jessica"

'Parks and Rec' and Rashida

Rashida Jones isn't too optimistic that her "Parks and Recreation" character, Ann, and Aziz Ansari's Tom will make it as a couple when the NBC sitcom returns Sept. 20.

"I don't think the chances are very good, personally," Jones said, adding that Ann needs to stop defining herself by the men in her life.

As far as the show's chances of surviving beyond its upcoming fourth season, Jones is hopeful, but says it's hard not to think about just how long the critically acclaimed but low-rated show can last.

"It's hard not to. We've always been on the bubble. NBC's never really let us relax into being on that network," she said, but she sees the upside of the situation. "As a cast we really have bonded. Every single moment that we work together we appreciate, and it's the loveliest atmosphere I've ever worked in.

"We kind of don't think about it anymore because the reality—it just always feels like we're about to not be on the air. So we just appreciate the moments." MP

Rob Corddry of 'Childrens Hospital' busy in comedy ward

Los Angeles Times

Rob Corddry is cresting what he calls his busiest year ever. In addition to creating and starring in the edgy Adult Swim comedy "Childrens Hospital," he also appears in a flurry of upcoming films. The 41-year-old former correspondent on Comedy Central's "The Daily Show" talked about his work

Yeah, I was a big fan of "St. Elsewhere" growing up. That's about it. I used to watch "Grey's Anatomy" over my wife's shoulder when I was on the computer. That didn't necessarily inspire a parody; I just thought that a children's hospital was a funny place to place a typical hospital drama parody. I drew from "Grey's Anatomy" and "House" for the first couple of seasons, but we rarely parody those hospital shows or any show.

Exactly. I cast the show with my friends. It's the same idea as before—I wanted to create a fun environment with like-minded people, and the people I cast are largely in that UCB [Upright Citizens Brigade] world I was talking about.

It sounds like it's this generation's equivalent of the Second City.

Very much so. UCB was born directly out of Second City. I've seen a lot of Venn diagrams coming out which put the names together and all the shows we're on, and they're trying to figure out this group, this family. And no one's really defined it vet because there's no one head of it.

Video games that really wail

Los Angeles Times

"Sound Shapes," released Tuesday for Sony's PS₃ and handheld system Vita, isn't the typical video game score. The game uses previously unheard tracks from the likes of Beck and Deadmau5, among others, to create a universe where the songs explored are dependent upon a user's movements.

Like last year's "Portal 2," which featured music from Jonathan Coulton and the National, "Sound Shapes" brings a little pop cred further into video game culture. They're not the only games to have winning scores. Here are a few recent examples worth investigating.

Journey

Austin Wintory's score for this PS3 game comprises 18 relatively short pieces, many of them mixing orchestral flourishes with ambient electronics. There are hints of Eastern mysticism, and these string-based arrangements are the stuff of Hollywood epics.

Superbrothers: Sword & Sworcery EP

Canadian singer-songwriter Jim Guthrie struck a wondrous tone for much of the score of this mobile game. His electronic flourishes aren't quite retro, but wouldn't be out of place in an electrical parade at a Disney theme park, either.

This recently released downloadable game on the PlayStation Network boasts a psychedelic head trip of a score from David Kanaga and Jason DeGroot, fusing the latest dance trends with "Tron"-worthy craziness. This is a racing game where the music can induce a trance.

Max Payne 3

Noise rockers Health crafted the tensionfilled soundtrack for this multi-platform blockbuster series in lieu of a new album. and the move pays off. While there's plenty of action movie heroics throughout this score, this is the best showcase yet for Health's synth-driven versatility.

Bastion

Darren Korb's score for this downloadable Xbox game is a little folksy and more than a bit Western, with hip-hop beats and gunslinger guitars. It's a sunburned soundtrack to a wild frontier that re-imagines American roots music as something almost alien.

The Savoy and Square
One preach absinthe and self-service wine pours

By Emily Van Zandt | REDEYE

From the table-top beer taps at Bull & Bear to the schoolgirl uniform-clad servers at Detention, sometimes it seems like local bars have to have a gimmick. Sometimes they impress, sometimes they annoy the heck out of people—it's a dangerous game. Recently, owners behind two recently opened bars have placed their bets on unique drink concepts. But will the absinthe-focused menu at The Savoy in Wicker Park and the self-serve wine stations at Square One in the South Loop work in their favor? I stopped by to find out.

Square One
1400 S. Michigan Ave. 312-786-1750
Off to a good start

The scene: This South Loop bar sits on a particularly busy stretch of Michigan Avenue, with fellow newcomers City Tavern, Waffles and Alain's all steps away. The bar is sleek without being too stuffy, and on the

The shtick: Enter through the door on Michigan Avenue and you'll be greeted by a set of soda fountain-like contraptions, but with wine bottles rather than cola syrup. These selferve machines dispense vino by the "taste," half glass or full glass. You order using an ATM-like swipe card that records your charges to pay at the end of the night. My friend and I opted to order by the glass ($8-$12) from our server rather than trek back and forth to the gadgets, but I could see how it might come in handy when the bar's slammed. Shouts to the first person who gets tipsy and mixes all the different "taste" options, graveyard soda-style. The menu is anything but wine-focused, though, with plenty of cocktail and beer options. I'd come back for the Le Chiffre ($11) a refreshingly bubbly mix of botanical vodka, yellow chartreuse, lavender and sparkling rose.

Do ... expect to debate seating options. The sidewalk patio has people-watching potential, but inside, there's a curtain-lined jumbo screen high above the bar. The screening of "The Princess Bride" may not have had sound, but it still lent a retro drive-in theater vibe.

Don't... bother with the food. The menu features meat and cheese plates, salads, almonds and olives, but with tiny tables that barely fit more than drinks (plus a server who didn't bother to explain which cheese was which), it feels like an afterthought. They might be better off setting out bowls of nuts and olives and nixing the food menu altogether.

Bottom line: If you're looking for a new spot to sip in the South Loop, put this on your list to try—especially while the sidewalk patio is still open. If you keep in mind that it's a bar and not a spot to grab a bite to eat, you'll be set.

The Savoy
1408 N. Milwaukee Ave. 773-698-6925
Off to a

The scene: This nautically themed Wicker Park tavern was seriously buzzing on a recent Thursday night. By 9 p.m., high-top tables were filled with dates and friend-dates, with bar stools occupied by post-work cocktailers chatting up bartender Deidre Darling. Both the staff and patrons are young, and the vibe feels at once busy and casual. Plenty of worn wood and rustic rope details channel the sea theme without going overboard.

The shtick: The Savoy's drink menu is all about absinthe, an anise-flavored spirit known for 19th century legends of green fairies and hallucinations. While this loveit-or-hate-it booze has cycled in and out of trendiness over the years, few local bars really showcase it in cocktails and none have declared it a focus. Here it's featured in all of the house cocktails ($12), most of which are subtle enough for those who can't stomach absinthe's licorice flavor on its own. Only serious absinthe fans (are there any out there?) will want to bother with the traditional service, which makes use of vintage absinthe fountains to drip cold water and sugar into a straight pour ($7-$16).

truffle tincture, was rich and smooth without being too heavy for the summer months. Order it as (or with) dessert and you won't regret it. According to Darling, the Dixie Drugstore (absinthe with orange flower water, bitter lemon, Cajun spice and orgeat syrup made with oats) has been the most popular, and its refreshingly sweet flavor makes it easy to see why.

Don't ... expect to get away with just splitting small dishes. Unlike seemingly every other bar and restaurant right now, The Savoy isn't focused on small plates. There are few appetizers, salads, raw bar options and "light fare" seafood options in addition to a hefty menu of full dinner plates including ancho- and coffee-crusted pork chop, barbecued chicken and maple- and jalapeno-glazed salmon. Let me warn you, the appetizer portions skew small (the $14 scallops appetizer comes with two of the bivalves), and while the chicken ($22) was incredibly tender and served with some ultra-tasty brussels sprouts, ordering full entrees to share as a group can add up quickly.

Bottom line: I can see The Savoy luring Wicker
Parkers who are craving a serious seafood spot, the likes of which really hasn't been seen in the 'hood lately. The price point may turn some off, but perhaps those on a tight budget will make their way to the bar for a drink or two.

Do ... try more than one cocktail. The Savoy Truffle, a mix of sherry, brandy and a black

NIGHTCRAWLERS

SEEN ON THE SCENE AT... LOLLA AFTER-PARTY Logan Square Auditorium, 2539 N. Kedzie Blvd.

Last week, we kicked off our annual lost weekend of Lollapalooza at the Filter magazine party with Neon Indian and Twin Shadow. It was a night of great music, tons of tequila and—best of all—snow COITIES. —CRAIG SEYMOUR, REDEYE CONTRIBUTOR

How did you come up with your stage name?

When I was 18, I was dating a drummer. The band broke up, and they started calling me "Yoko Homo" behind my back. It just stuck. I wanted to make it a positive thing.

Are you influenced by Yoko Ono?

Oh, definitely. Maybe John Lennon more than Yoko Ono. But also David Bowie, New Order and glam rock.

How do you put together your look?

I base my look on things that seem outside of time. I don't like to feel like I'm in any specific time period.

Who should everybody be listening to now? Grimes. She has really amazing energy.

What brings you out tonight?

I came out here with a couple of friends. They wanted to see DJs. If it involves dancing, I'm there.

What makes a good DJ?

Obviously, knowing the music. But also being humble and being out there, showing that you're a good person and you do good music.

What brings you out tonight?

I love the artists. I love Neon Indian and Twin Shadow. But I didn't know there were free drinks. There are, and I'm very excited about that.

Is a party always better with free drinks? Always. There's no guilt to your night.

Jessica Biel's latest film, "Total Recall," may have bombed over the weekend, but the actress's fashion choices were anything but a wash-out while promoting the movie. Wearing an orange top and pants by Giambattista Valli in Cancun, a hot white peplum Mugler skirt at San Diego Comic Con and a Chanel dress at the MTV Movie Awards, the future Mrs. Justin Timberlake sartorially tore up the film's press tour.

On a recent appearance during a press conference for the film at the Four Seasons hotel in Beverly Hills, Biel continued to turn heads by going nude—wearing the buff nude color, that is. She rocked a sleeveless sequin top and buff nude lace skirt by Oscar de la Renta and kept the color scheme neutral with a pair of Brian Atwood platform Mary Jane pumps and simple gold bangles. The mix of textures looked polished and feminine. For a similar look, try these pieces.

Who. What Wear

Lollapalooza was full of mud, dancing and loud music. We spied four fashionable festivalgoers and asked them some questions: (1) What inspired your outfit? (2) Who are you looking forward to seeing most? (3) What's your tip for having fun at Lolla?

British royals really, really love them some Olympics

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Going to fancy balls, dressing up all the time, remembering to curtsy or bow—it must get really tough to be a British royal sometimes. That's why Princes William and Harry and Duchess Catherine are so insanely excited about the Olympics being in London this year. They could walk to them! (If Kate used transit modes other than helicopters, that is.) We checked out these three amigos at their favorite Olympic events, and did the guesswork about what they might be thinking. Tally ho, chaps! DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

Track cycling Aug. 2 William: Cripes, Harry, we have the help to do this for us. Get down! Harry: I'm free! Free at last!

Track cycling Aug. 2

Kate: Really? Kristen Stewart cheated on him? Are you sure? Harry: Yup. Saw the photos in Us Weekly. Totally snogging with a married guy. Kate: That trollop! I knew she wasn't good enough for a Brit! William: Children, please. The sporting event.

Track cycling Aug. 2 Kate: Isn't this romantic? The pageantry!
The national spirit! The calf muscles! William: Oh how I love it when you're giddy, you little hen. Let's pop off for a snog behind the arena later.
